EUROPEAN FISH PRICE REPORT

15 August 2002 – No. 08/2002

LATEST TRENDS IN THE EUROPEAN MARKET

GRUNDFISH: According to the Norges Rafisklag, total landings of Atlantic cod are expected to decline by 7% to 838 000 tonnes in 2002. This decline is already being reflected in a fall in frozen Atlantic cod imports in key European markets. Imports in the main European cod market, the UK, fell by 9% to just over 18 000 tonnes during the first quarter of 2002. In value terms, the decline was 6%. The drop in frozen imports in both France and Spain was more striking with French imports down 19% to 5 000 MT and Spain down 44% to 3 000 MT in the January-April period. In value terms, the decline for these countries was 21% and 48% respectively..... Page 3

FLATFISH: Improved turbot sales are expected. The supply of wild turbot will decrease, whereas farmed turbot supplies will remain high leading to stable prices for the latter. Page 5

TUNA/PELAGICS: At the end of July, the tuna market reached a turning point. Catches have been extremely good in the Indian Ocean compared to previous years. The European and West African/Indian plants, anticipating the summer holidays, are already very well supplied (with the exception of Ghana). Since tuna reefer-carriers loads, diverted from the Western Pacific Ocean, have just reached the Seychelles and Mauritius, the Indian Ocean operated tuna boats are looking for opportunities to sell surplus stocks. Thailand, where there is a shortage of frozen tuna and where prices are relatively strong, is a target market. In August, good quality yellowfin prices are expected to stay firm or even to increase in Europe and Asia, as supplies are likely to be limited. Page 7

MACKEREL/HERRING: There is limited market activity for mackerel and herring. In Norway, price negotiations for the new season will take place soon. The Russian Federation and Ukraine are starting to show interest in herring. However, despite considerable stocks in Norway and due to pending price negotiations for raw material, most packers in Norway are holding off selling for the moment..... Page 7

CEPHALOPODS: Due to extremely bad weather, there have only been moderate squid catches in South Africa, although according to fishermen, there are good juvenile stocks in the water. There is very little stock available and European markets are reporting relatively poor movements over the normally busy August vacation period. Interestingly, Japan is back in the market for XL size, probably because Sahara squid is scarce. Page 8

SHRIMP/LOBSTER: Compared with the same period last year, average shrimp import prices were down in many European markets during the early months of 2002. Unit import prices in France for frozen warmwater shrimp fell, for example, by 14% to just over Euro 7/kg during the January-April period. Weakening prices are stimulating sales with import volumes showing an upward trend in several markets.

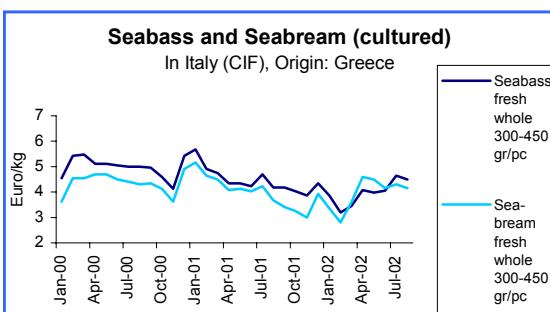

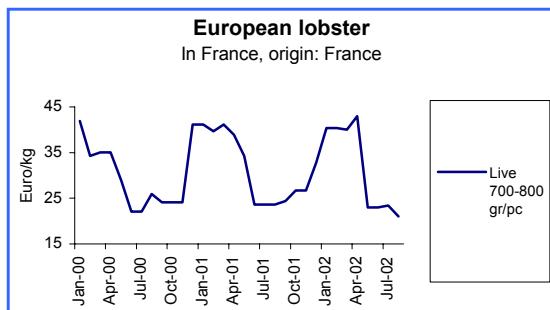

Volumes were up 11% in France and 15% in Spain during the first four months of the year. UK shrimp imports, however, fell 4% during the first quarter despite a 9% drop in average import prices. In Canada, the lobster spring season ended at the end of July and the fall season will start on 8 August. The production of whole cooked lobster will be limited, fall-season products going mainly for meat and raw tails. Page 9

BIVALVES/NON TRADITIONAL SPECIES: Mussel demand, notably in Belgium, is strong as usual for this time of the year and prices are expected to increase this month. The Dutch mussel season opened on 17 July and production is expected to increase on last year's level, although still below average levels. Presently, auction prices are high due to pressure from the retailers who have some difficulty satisfying requirements..... Page 11

SHARK/FRESHWATER FISH: Page 12

SALMON/TROUT: Farmed salmon prices are expected to increase as the autumn approaches. Trout prices are stable but lower compared to last year..... Page 13

SEABASS/SEABREAM: The market situation for seabass and seabream is very similar to last month. Both supply and demand for these products are good. However, as predicted, prices are slowly decreasing..... Page 13
